SURROUND YOURSELF WITH ASSETS, NOT LIABILITIES

Once upon a time, around the year 1500, when Stephan the Great was fighting the Turks with an average success, an Italian monk named Luca Paccioli decided to give us a job 500 years later. He invented accounting. Of course, thousands of years before, the Mesopotamians, Egyptians and Babylonians made sure that Pacciolo will have everything he needed for that.

After this magnificent invention, nobody could stop the accountants of the world in developing it and making it so complicated that only people with serious financial skills could understand it. The accountants, also called bean-keepers or double-entry deviants didn't quite manage to explain what exactly they were doing. That is why people are usually calling their accountants only if they have to.
